When Brooke wrote her ex, Rashad, out of her life, she vowed to move on and never let him back in. Now with a devoted boyfriend and a promising career as a future OB/GYN, she had all the pieces in place for a great life. As she begins to deal with personal convictions, Brooke starts to question her current relationship as soon as her ex reappears. While struggling with forgiveness, Brooke enters into a period of her life she never saw coming.

With the stress of not living up to his father's expectations to follow his footsteps in ministry, Rashad became a smooth playboy with a controlling girlfriend fighting to change his ways. It wasn't until his brother began to date his ex's sister that he started to question his freedom as a bachelor and revisit one of the biggest mistakes of his life...breaking up with Brooke.

When these former high school sweethearts rekindle their initial friendship in the middle of their own turmoil, their collision causes a storm neither of them saw coming.

Will Brooke and Rashad be able to stand together after the storm settles or will their rekindled friendship end before it begins?

About Tanisia Moore

Tanisia hails from Southern California. However, with her father serving in the United States Air Force, she had the privilege to live and visit places that she would have never otherwise experienced. Around the age of six, she was given her first diary. Little did she know that this simple gift would open her love and passion for reading and writing. When she wasn't writing, she had her head in a book. She constantly challenged herself by participating in her school's writing competitions and the public library summer reading programs. By the eighth grade, her reading level was that of a high school senior. This was evident in her writing.

Upon turning 17, a family member found one of her diaries and shared one of the entries during an impromptu family meeting.

Tanisia felt violated and vowed to never write again. This would not last long, as she began her college career at Alabama A&M University as telecommunications major. While attending AAMU, she met who would later become her husband. She transferred to Clark Atlanta University to complete her undergraduate studies in Mass Media Arts with a concentration in radio. Before starting CAU, she travelled back home to California. It was there she stumbled across her godmother's California bar prep books. Fascinated with the study materials, she asked her godmother about law school and taking the bar exam. After that conversation, Tanisia knew that she wanted to practice law and focus her future law practice in the areas of entertainment and art. While attending CAU, she signed up to be a student radio host for WCLK. With help from her friends, she created her radio personality, Nisia Skyy. It wasn't long before she found herself writing for fun again. She would head over to Jazmine's Café on the campus of Morehouse to perform spoken word.

It would be almost decade later before Tanisia would step into her role as an attorney and as a published author. In between that transition, she spent her time being a contracts negotiator for one the largest defense contracting companies and one of the largest universities in Alabama. She is also married with two beautiful princesses.
